Meido Moore, Director

Meido Moore Sensei is the founder and Director of Shinjinkai. He began martial arts training in 1986, and in 1988 traveled to study meditation under Buddhist masters in India and Nepal. In 1990 he was invited by the late Aikido and Zen master Tenzan (Fumio) Toyoda Sensei to Chicago, where he began the first of six years residence as uchideshi; uchideshi are live-in trainees, engaged in a grueling traditional apprenticeship. Toyoda Sensei eventually named Moore as his primary Shihandai (master's assistant), the highest instructional title awarded by that teacher. Mr. Moore went on to serve as General Manager and later Director of the Aikido Association of America and Aikido Association International, and as founder of the Association for Tactical Applications, a consulting firm teaching practical applications of martial arts to armed professionals. In 1999, Toyoda Sensei designated Mr. Moore and another former uchideshi as the two inheritors of his unique methodology of Aikido training and instruction, with responsibility for carrying and transmitting those teachings. At that time, he directed that the dojo name Shinjinkan ("Truth-Heart-Hall") be used by Moore Sensei in perpetuity. It is from this name that Shinjinkai is derived.

Since 1990 Moore Sensei has instructed at several hundred training seminars and camps, at universities and colleges (Northwestern University, University of Chicago, DePaul University, Notre Dame), corporate programs (Motorola), numerous fitness and community centers, and other venues throughout the United States and in Japan, England, Poland, Latvia, Greece, and Bulgaria. In both private and agency-sponsored trainings, he has instructed federal, state and local law-enforcement officers in the United States, as well as government security and police anti-terrorist units in Europe. His specific self-defense instruction for women has been featured on the NBC television series Starting Over.

In 2001 Moore Sensei founded Shinjinkai, and today continues his training in Aikido as well as classical Japanese martial arts, a study which takes him to Japan regularly. He is a Zen Buddhist priest serving with Daiyuzenji, the Rinzaï Zen temple co-located with Shinjinkai, and with the Korinji Foundation.
